Course Synopsis

Numerous studies on workplace happiness have shown that happy employees are 2 times more productive and they are likely to stay in their jobs 5 times longer than unhappy employees. They are 6 times more energized and they are likely to take 10 times less medical leaves than their unhappy colleagues.

Happier workers also tend to help their colleagues 33% more than their least happy colleagues. They are 36% more motivated and are likely to achieve their goals 31% more than unhappy employees.

Making employees happy becomes a necessity rather than an exception in a disruptive economy.

Organizations need to adopt a holistic approach in aligning and internalizing its purpose, people, practices and culture to nurture a happier workplace.
